

Dear FCC Reader,

I would like to put my 2.5 cents towards the Cell Phone in the aircraft issues. Besides being a HUGE nuisance sitting next to someone who is blabbering away, it is a huge security risk.

My wife works as a flight attendant and my heart sinks every time she boards a plane to go to work. She loves her job and I love her, and I cannot stop her from flying around.

We as a leader in the world set regulations that have a impact around the world. Allowing cell phone use while the plane is in the air is a bad idea. The current phones that are on the plane are on the seat and a person with bad intent cannot have a conversation about this aircraft with people around him/her.

With a cell phone they can step away from their seat and use the phone in the lavatory or area around the galley to call someone on the ground or another aircraft.

Please do not approve the use of cell phone. My wife (a flight attendant) already has a very stressful job and with the use of cell phones, she has to police the cell phone use and be weiry of anyone who looks different or talking in another language.

Don't approve cell phone use, onlt to revert it back after a terrorist or air accident. There are certain things that we have to keep sanitary of cell phones and that is a flying aircraft with only communication going to and from the aircraft going through the aircraft systems.

The cell phone usage on a flying aircraft does not have a place in our aircrafts.

Please keep our planes and people working on them safe.

Sincerely,
Guri Dhingra
